

A nighttime photograph of a large, modern building, identified as Northern Lights College in Dawson Creek. The building's upper section features a long row of vertical glass panels that are illuminated from within, creating a vibrant display of blue, purple, and pink light. The lower section of the building is dark, with some windows and doors visible. The building is situated behind a paved area with some landscaping, including small trees and grass. Several streetlights are visible, casting a warm glow. The sky is dark. The image is framed by a white border with crop marks and color calibration bars at the top.
